5. Mr. Colby is reviewing the initial KEP/KIQ evaluations before deciding how far to pursue forward with the evaluation exercise. Some evaluations were more fuzzy than others, and he wants to consider carefully which evaluation methods will be followed in the future.

9. Mr. Proctor asked [REDACTED] about the impact of the grounding of the SR 71s. [REDACTED] pleaded ignorance. Mr. Proctor advised that engine explosions had occurred separately, one on the flight from Cadina and one from Beall AFB.

10. The [REDACTED] mission for this week has been confirmed. All SR 71 aircraft are on stand-down, and presumably no further missiles will be flown until the cause of the explosions has been determined.

11. Dick Lehman, Maurice Ernst, and Hank Knoche provided more feedback to Mr. Proctor on the matter of the burden posed by requirements for press briefings. They are generally agreed that the analysts do not regard the briefings as bothersome, and that in normal situations they are not too numerous, in times of crises, however, requests for such briefings multiply and are difficult to handle. Some analysts were uneasy when certain journalists seemed to be playing one intelligence agency against another, and most are a bit apprehensive about their vulnerability to administrative action under present guidelines, which they find ambiguous.

12. [] of the Salt staff commented on developments at the session of the Standing Consultative Commission where he was the CIA representative. He said little real negotiations on the specifics of deactivation etc were discussed, although the Soviets seemed more ready to talk nuts and bolts than was the US. He reported on Soviet reactions to a belated US protest about an SS-9 overshoot of Kamchatka last September, when the missile guidance system failed and impact occurred just north of Midway. The Soviets had not announced a restricted area for this shot and the US was concerned that the Soviets has failed to use the hotline.

[] said the US did raise with the Soviets the subject of the "ambiguity" situation (hold items), but he said that as Proctor knew, this was being handled by other (presumably Kissinger to Brezhnev) other means.
